

Color Blind

© 2017 Lyrics by Kata Kozma

I still hear your voice clear and bright.
I can still smell the clothes you wore that night.
Your lavender hair on my mind,
The wind is blowing the perfume you left behind.

The Sun is watching as we fade
And we slowly break down into a million shades.
I keep thinking about when we couldn't stay apart,
We wrote red confessions on small paper hearts.

Up all night with you
On my mi-nd is you
Every word, every word we said was true.
The sky is turning blue
Every star(s) a different hue
But without you, I'm color blind.

A thousand kinds of green was every leaf
You made me notice on the winter trees.
Your wide ocean drew me in
As the purple sunset rested on your chin.

The Sun is watching as we fade
And we slowly break down into a million shades.
I keep thinking about when we couldn't stay apart
We wrote red confessions on small paper hearts.

Up all night with you
On my mind is you
Every word, every word we said was true.
The sky is turning blue
Every star'(s) a different hue
But without you, I'm color blind.

When I'm feeling lonely
I think about the time
I put my yellow raincoat
On your shoulder-line.
Flowers were blooming
Amber ruby and white
I saw them all
In your eyes
All so bright
But now I'm color blind.
